Further conclusions, recommendations and more detailed analysis can be found in the summary document and full report.

Possible with 68% of respondents - Online communication between healthcare users and healthcare providers.

Further than you think. In the Netherlands, we have already gone a certain distance, but there is still a long way to go. This infographic sets out the main points of the eHealth monitor at a glance.

In the Netherlands we are further than you think along the path toward eHealth. But we still have a long way to go. There is no shared vision about how eHealth can be developed more quickly and effectively. What is needed is a clear national direction that all stakeholders can support and with which added value can be achieved.

So what are our findings? In the Netherlands, we are further than you think along the path toward eHealth. But we still have a long way to go. There is no shared vision about how eHealth can be developed more quickly and effectively. What is needed is a clear national direction that all stakeholders can support and with which added value can be achieved. In the Netherlands we are further than you think along the path toward eHealth. But we still have a long way to go. There is no shared vision about how eHealth can be developed more quickly and effectively.

Healthcare providers, patients, ICT providers and insurers are together in a position to further advance healthcare on the basis of eHealth. It could even be time to adopt a different approach with respect to the coordinating role of the government, following the example of the ‘meaningful use’ programme in the United States.

In the Netherlands, eHealth is still forging its way into the unknown; eHealth is still a hotchpotch of trial and experimentation. eHealth is the use of ICT and in particular internet technology to enhance skills and enhance healthcare. However, effective implementation remains difficult.

In the Netherlands we are further than you think along the path toward eHealth. But we still have a long way to go. There is no shared vision about how eHealth can be developed more quickly and effectively. What is needed is a clear national direction that all stakeholders can support and with which added value can be achieved. In the Netherlands we are further than you think along the path toward eHealth. But we still have a long way to go. There is no shared vision about how eHealth can be developed more quickly and effectively. What is needed is a clear national direction that all stakeholders can support and with which added value can be achieved. In the Netherlands we are further than you think along the path toward eHealth. But we still have a long way to go. There is no shared vision about how eHealth can be developed more quickly and effectively. What is needed is a clear national direction that all stakeholders can support and with which added value can be achieved.

In the Netherlands we are further than you think along the path toward eHealth. But we still have a long way to go. There is no shared vision about how eHealth can be developed more quickly and effectively. What is needed is a clear national direction that all stakeholders can support and with which added value can be achieved.

In the Netherlands we are further than you think along the path toward eHealth. But we still have a long way to go. There is no shared vision about how eHealth can be developed more quickly and effectively. What is needed is a clear national direction that all stakeholders can support and with which added value can be achieved.

In the Netherlands we are further than you think along the path toward eHealth. But we still have a long way to go. There is no shared vision about how eHealth can be developed more quickly and effectively. What is needed is a clear national direction that all stakeholders can support and with which added value can be achieved.

In the Netherlands we are further than you think along the path toward eHealth. But we still have a long way to go. There is no shared vision about how eHealth can be developed more quickly and effectively. What is needed is a clear national direction that all stakeholders can support and with which added value can be achieved. In the Netherlands we are further than you think along the path toward eHealth. But we still have a long way to go. There is no shared vision about how eHealth can be developed more quickly and effectively. What is needed is a clear national direction that all stakeholders can support and with which added value can be achieved. In the Netherlands we are further than you think along the path toward eHealth. But we still have a long way to go. There is no shared vision about how eHealth can be developed more quickly and effectively. What is needed is a clear national direction that all stakeholders can support and with which added value can be achieved. In the Netherlands we are further than you think along the path toward eHealth. But we still have a long way to go. There is no shared vision about how eHealth can be developed more quickly and effectively. What is needed is a clear national direction that all stakeholders can support and with which added value can be achieved. In the Netherlands we are further than you think along the path toward eHealth. But we still have a long way to go. There is no shared vision about how eHealth can be developed more quickly and effectively. What is needed is a clear national direction that all stakeholders can support and with which added value can be achieved. In the Netherlands we are further than you think along the path toward eHealth. But we still have a long way to go. There is no shared vision about how eHealth can be developed more quickly and effectively. What is needed is a clear national direction that all stakeholders can support and with which added value can be achieved. In the Netherlands we are further than you think along the path toward eHealth. But we still have a long way to go. There is no shared vision about how eHealth can be developed more quickly and effectively. What is needed is a clear national direction that all stakeholders can support and with which added value can be achieved. In the Netherlands we are further than you think along the path toward eHealth. But we still have a long way to go. There is no shared vision about how eHealth can be developed more quickly and effectively. What is needed is a clear national direction that all stakeholders can support and with which added value can be achieved. In the Netherlands we are further than you think along the path toward eHealth. But we still have a long way to go. There is no shared vision about how eHealth can be developed more quickly and effectively. What is needed is a clear national direction that all stakeholders can support and with which added value can be achieved. In the Netherlands we are further than you think along the path toward eHealth. But we still have a long way to go. There is no shared vision about how eHealth can be developed more quickly and effectively. What is needed is a clear national direction that all stakeholders can support and with which added value can be achieved. In the Netherlands we are further than you think along the path toward eHealth. But we still have a long way to go. There is no shared vision about how eHealth can be developed more quickly and effectively. What is needed is a clear national direction that all stakeholders can support and with which added value can be achieved. In the Netherlands we are further than you think along the path toward eHealth. But we still have a long way to go. There is no shared vision about how eHealth can be developed more quickly and effectively. What is needed is a clear national direction that all stakeholders can support and with which added value can be achieved. In the Netherlands we are further than you think along the path toward eHealth. But we still have a long way to go. There is no shared vision about how eHealth can be developed more quickly and effectively. What is needed is a clear national direction that all stakeholders can support and with which added value can be achieved. In the Netherlands we are further than you think along the path toward eHealth. But we still have a long way to go. There is no shared vision about how eHealth can be developed more quickly and effectively. What is needed is a clear national direction that all stakeholders can support and with which added value can be achieved. In the Netherlands we are further than you think along the path toward eHealth. But we still have a long way to go. There is no shared vision about how eHealth can be developed more quickly and effectively. What is needed is a clear national direction that all stakeholders can support and with which added value can be achieved.